Our Top Legal Service Options If you're not sure if U.S. legal forms are right for you, this article on the best online legal services is a review of our top five options. Our team looked at a variety of solutions and limited our recommendations based on affordability, types of forms available, access to lawyers, registered agent service and ease of use. View Alternatives I think in terms of delaying complications, for us, our clients were an advisory outfit so any organization, any clients who have a very small or large IT staff and have a work delay to be done in terms of application development, I think this is a great fit for this kind of model where you go into no coding. You can deploy applications as well as workflows very quickly. Great for automating formats! So for our need it was very adequate, very adequate. As far as scalability is concerned, we have had no problems so far. Prosl would say that the valuable features are the form design. The design of the form is extremely, extremely intuitive, but also the design of the dashboard. I also love drilling possibilities and so on. I would say they are some of the two best assets in these product features. The technical support was experienced and pre-experimental. They are all very supportive and very good because one of the things they always look for in a product is support. I've been with other organizations where it was very relaxed, so this, Intellect is one of the best out there. ConsOne of the sites I would like to see improved, or actually could be added to, is integration with some of the other platforms. For example, Microsoft Office, SharePoint, CRM, and all other platforms. Another thing you really need to put in is that BPM is central to everything and that you're integrating right into your line of business applications, your line of business applications can be written in C-sharp, it can be written in Java. You want to access this information, and then a workflow or create an application. Application.
